Designing Engaging Gardens For Kids:

From Seed to Table

Join us for an inspiring Saturday morning to learn strategies for planting and growing an edible garden with young children. Our workshop facilitator, Jane Hayes/Garden Jane, will share design ideas and getting started tips. Jane will walk you through some hands-on gardening activity ideas to use within your early learning and child care program. Participants will have an opportunity to ask questions about their own gardening projects or how to start an edible garden within the context of their own early learning spaces. An informal presentation along with fun, interactive components will be offered.

Saturday May 30

10:00 am to 12:00 pm

About Jane Hayes

Jane is a gardener, educator, and artist with eighteen years of experience. She founded Garden Jane in 2007 to help people learn how to grow and connect to healthy food, gardens, and each other. Jane has worked directly with 30,000 people since then. She invites people in with storytelling, art and play, and shares what science, research, and pattern-based observation have to offer. Her current work includes working with garden communities of all ages, teaching permaculture design, and helping grow the scope of urban agriculture in the GTA. Jane has a B.A. in Anthropology and Environmental Studies (U of T), a Masters in Environmental Studies (York U) and certificates in Permaculture Design and Teaching Permaculture. Jane is a mom to Chloe and River.
